V. Vinayak, written by Chinni Krishna and produced by Allu Aravind. It stars Allu Arjun in the title role, alongside Tamannaah, Prakash Raj and Kelly Dorji. The film revolves around badri, a qualified warrior trained by a religious guru and martial arts expert Bheeshma Narayan. After being made protector of the Badrinath temple, Badri finds his loyalty divided when he tries to revive the faith of Alabananda, an atheist, in God and is put against her cruel uncle Sarkar, while his Guru suspects him of being in love with Alabananda, something against the rules to become his successor. It stars Ashwini Kalsekar, Rakesh Varre, Rao Ramesh and Praguethi. Allu Arjun, who plays a modern Indian samurai,[6] took intensive martial arts and sword fighting courses in Vietnam. [7] This film also marks its first association with Tamannaah. [9] Filmmaker Ravi Varman in an interview said that the film was shot on a Panavision lens at a set in Kulaba on his way to Rohtang Pass, separated from Badrinath Temple, on the set of Hyderabad and Spain, Italy, Germany and Austria. [10] Earlier, it was reported that the film would also have a duplicate version in Tamil, with actor Santhanam's comedy scenes added, but the plan was abandoned due to the commercial failure of Tamil-lined versions of Telugu Shakti and Magadheera films. [11] [12] Made on a budget of 42 crore ($5.9 million), it was also one of the most expensive films in the Telugu language at the time. [4] The first film was released on June 10, 2011, along with a version called Malayalam, on June 10, 2011, on 1,400 screens worldwide and lasted 50 days in 187 theaters. [14] It also became the second largest telugu in Karnataka after Magadheera at that time. [15] The film had a record 7.25 crore ($1.0 million), which was later surpassed by Allu Arjun's 2012 film Julayi. [16] Prem Rakshiith won the Filmfare Award best dance choreographer for the song nath Nath. [17] Plot In order to protect ancient Hindu temples from terrorists, religious gurus and martial arts expert Bheeshma Bheeshma prepare an army. One day, when some of his students fail to recite a difficult hymn from Vishnu Sahasranāma, he is surprised to listen to Badri, a young boy, reciting without any mistake. Impressed, Bheeshma convinces Badri's parents and takes him. Badri grows to become an effective fighter and is assigned to protect the Badrinath Temple. Soon he will come across a visitor named Alabananda, whose grandfather falls ill upon arrival in Badrinath. Badri manages to heal him and takes them all to the temple, where Alakananda throws the lamp, causing Badri to follow her and throw her into the Alaknanda River. Her grandfather tells Bheeshma about her atheism and asks her to save her. Badri, according to his guru's orders, rescues Alakananda, who is ordered to light 1 lakh lamps as punishment. Badri convinces her to light the lamps with devotion, after which her grandfather reveals why she became agnostic. Alabananda lost faith in God after seeing her parents die in the temple fire and had to be brought to Badrinath because her life became in danger after insulting Sarkar's wife, a feared don. As a form of revenge, she wants Alabananda to marry her son Nani. Listening to the truth, Badri promises to revive Alakenanda's faith in God. Meanwhile, the Amarnath Temple is under attack. With his protector killed and devoted threatened, Bheeshma calls Badri, who takes down all the terrorists and gains publicity. Alabananda soon falls in love with Badri and her faith in God is revived. She meets Badri's parents and confesses her love for him. They agree for their marriage, but when Bheeshma tells them that she wants Badri to be his successor, and because they remain unmarried, a broken-hearted Alabananda begins to lose her faith once again, before Badri tells her that she will unite her with her lover and help her obtain the Brahma lotus to be offered to Lord Badrinath for the fulfillment of her wish. She, however, does not reveal that she loves him and follows him to the mountains. Meanwhile, Sarkar and his family learn about Badri through the marnath incident recording, and Nani is sent to bring Alakenanda back, unless Badri dies. Badri and Alabahada manage to obtain the Brahma lotus, but on the way they are attacked by Nani and his henchmen. Badri fights them while both Alabananda and Bheesh Narayan fulfill their wishes. He promises to bring her back after six months, so that her wish becomes fulfilled. To distract Badri, Nani throws a statue into the river, and Badri jumps to catch it, killing all the acolytes who jumped with it. However, he is stabbed by Nani, who claims Badri loves Alabananda, shocking Bheeshma whose suspicion increases when Badri gains consciousness and shouts the name Arakananda in front of everyone as she is taken. The temple is closed for six months, Badri manages to survive. Alakananda's marriage is arranged with Nani after Sarkar killed his grandfather. Badri regains Bheeshma's trust and his duties. After a drunk Nani tries to rape Alabananda, she writes a letter asking Badri to come and rescue her. Bheeshma receives the letter and breaks it, but Badri somehow comes over pieces and sends him the same mountain land that he used to heal his grandfather in response. She tries to escape with her friend Razia, but only the latter escapes. Razia meets and convinces Badri to go to Bellary and rescue Alakenanda, while Sarkar and his gorillas destroy the ashram in the absence of Badri and Bheeshma. Arriving at Bellary Station, Badri warns Nani and his cronies to stop, but their failure to kill all of them by Badri and nenta Nani, while Razia escorts Alabananda to the station. Seeing the ashram in ruins, Bheeshma's rage grows when he learns that Badri has taken the sword intended only for religious protection. Sarkar's wife is angry with him because of their son's condition and accompanies him vengefully to Badrinath. Badri and Alabananda arrive at the temple, but Bheeshma, sensing that Badri had betrayed him, orders him to leave. Alabananda, however, goes in and thanks Lord Badrinath for releasing Badri from the clutches of Bheeshma, before Sarkar arrives and orders his goons to capture her. Badri teaches her, revealing that he only wanted to keep his promise to bring her for worship, and that he does not love her or any other woman in the world. Bheeshma, seeing Badri's dedication to him instead, apologizes and allows him to worship, but seeing Arakananda's true love for him, orders him to save her. Badri fights Sarkar and his gorillas, but spares him a warning to never follow Alakenanda again. Bheeshma blesses Badri and Alabananda before asking them to hand over their future child for training. [18] Release Certified A (adult only) by the Central Board of Film Certification on account of graphic action violence.[19] the film was released in the cinema, along with its version called Malayalam on June 10, 2011. Badrinath's reception received mixed and positive reviews from critics. Idlebrain.com gave a review of the 3/5 rating stating the plus points of the film are Allu Arjun (dances, fights and cinema and grand production values. On the other hand, the narrative has no adhesion and the scenario should have been better. A film with this grandeur needs emotional support to make it enjoyable. V. V. V. who turned out to be a very successful director with his previous films who faltered this time to deal with a subject of such a large canvas. Idlebrain wrote: Allu Arjun had enormous pain in traveling to Vietnam to learn Southeast Asian martial arts for this film. All his hard work appears in the film where he appears more like a warrior from the regions of Southeast Asia (Chinese or Japanese) with a ponytail and leather gear (chest belt and shoes). He's amazing with fluid movements in his dances. He's good at wrestling. Idlebrain also criticized Prakash Raj's appearance by saying he looked more Asian. [20] Filmibeat also rated 3/5 for the film.
